

Bird Survivor

The Jamaican Becard lives in the forests of the mountains in Jamaica. It spends most of its time in the canopy feeding on fruits and insects, seeking cover from predators and raising its family. But it's not always easy!

Jamaican Becards, like many other birds, face many challenges during their breeding season. They must find a mate and build a nest. Then protect the nest and eggs. They must also feed their chicks so that they can grow into strong and healthy birds.

JAMAICAN BECARD

JAMAICAN BECARD
NEST

Although it is the only becard in the West Indies, it is losing its forest home. Trees are being cleared for agriculture and development, making it much harder for Jamaican Becards to survive.

In the following activities, both children and adults will learn about nesting birds and see if you've got what it takes to raise your own little bird family. Click below or download the "Jamaican Becard Bird Survivor Game Instructions" for step by step instructions and materials you will need.

